PageRage: London Sights Layout Union Jack

Hail Britannia PageRage style

Were you like me, getting up middle of the night to make sure you didn't miss one minute of the marriage of Kate Middleton and Prince William? If you haven't guessed, I love all things British, especially London. The Royal Wedding certainly did not disappoint. Bring on the pomp and ceremony; I can't get enough. The wedding was like one big fairy tale, though it would have added a bit more to this fairy tale wedding if Kate had arrived at Westminster Abbey in a horse drawn carriage and not by car.

In any case, here I am thousands of miles from London 'across the pond," waiting for the day I too will be able to walk into Westminster Abbey, as a tourist of course not the future Queen of England. To keep myself upbeat until I take off for the UK, I recently downloaded one of the PageRage London backgrounds for my Facebook page. No one will doubt where my sentiments lie when they click on my profile. PageRage makes it possible to further my bond with the Brits and inspire me to continue to save for my transatlantic journey.

PageRage actually offers a number of Facebook *backgrounds f*or London. It was really hard to decide which of the iconic PageRage London layouts to select. The London Bridge and Big Ben backgrounds were tempting. There was even a layout for William and Kate's wedding. In the end, I chose the Union Jack PageRage layout.

Fortunately, PageRage is so easy to use that I can easily change to one of their other London backgrounds anytime. My being a London groupie aside, I'm really glad that one of my friends suggested PageRage. As much as I use Facebook, I wanted some way to personalize my page. My picture tells you something about my fondness for the Brits. I'm wearing one of those outrageous hats that are all the rage at British weddings and the opening day of Ascot. Still I wanted to make a stronger statement about my British style.
